SUBJECT: National Strategies and the Global Economy

This is a pioneering attempt to assess how policies and developments in the global economy are likely to impact the security and economic interests of the U.S. From this I plan to develop an annual assessment of economic forces as a counterpart of the annual estimate of strategic forces.

The most striking thing to come through is how we are losing ground in high technological areas and how this can impair our economic and security interests. That is thumbnailed in the Key Judgments, pages vii-ix. We also undertake to appraise the national economic strategies which the major OECD countries, the Soviet Union, the Newly Industrializing Countries, the oil exporting countries and the Third World countries use in seeking to improve their participation in the global economy.
